the most prominent musical representation of northeastern thai culture and history its creation only dates to the 1950s and its strong ties to government programs has led many scholars to label pong lang as a propagandistic neo or non traditional genre of music instead i view pong lang as a contemporary form of meta cultural performance a cultural performance comprised of other cultural performances through which people publicly perform reflect upon and debate central ideas about society i argue that such meta cultural performances such as pong lang are useful occasions for studying performance as a powerful and flexible signifier of often diverse framings of meaning history and identity this ethnomusicological analysis is based on ethnographic research including documentation of performances interviews and participant observation i also include my research on secondary sources such as websites and promotional materials collected between 2012 and 2022 i analyze how people use pong lang to represent different scales of place e g local regional national and times the past present and future as well as the ways that pong lang functions as a type of habitus that both influences and is influenced by the workings of institutions such as the thai government education system and tourism industry i argue that pong lang s meanings are constructed by different people in different contexts through social interaction pong lang s meaning as a genre of musical and cultural performance therefore lies in its use by people and institutions in different situations and contexts and that these uses are wide ranging and far reaching informing debates and decisions about broad issues such as identity history tourism government initiatives and education i detail how pong lang as a musical practice and the discourses surrounding it serve as important

Metalinguage 2018-04-17 this dissertation examines the ways people and organizations employ northeastern thai pong lang music as a polyvalent signifier of identity history and culture people use and assign meaning to pong lang as a musical and social practice by using it to represent define and challenge ideas about who they are where they come from and how they should be understood while pong lang is perhaps the most prominent musical representation of northeastern thai culture and history its creation only dates to the 1950s and its strong ties to government programs has led many scholars to label pong lang as a propagandistic neo or non traditional genre of music instead i view pong lang as a contemporary form of meta cultural performance a cultural performance comprised of other cultural performances through which people publicly perform reflect upon and debate central ideas about society i argue that such meta cultural performances such as pong lang are useful occasions for studying performance as a powerful and flexible signifier of often diverse framings of meaning history and identity this ethnomusicological analysis is based on ethnographic research including documentation of performances interviews and participant observation i also include my research on secondary sources such as websites and promotional materials collected between 2012 and 2022 i analyze how people use pong lang to represent different scales of place e g local regional national and times the past present and future as well as the ways that pong lang functions as a type of habitus that both influences and is influenced by the workings of institutions such as the thai government education system and tourism industry i argue that pong lang s meanings are constructed by different people in different contexts through social interaction pong lang s meaning as a genre of musical and cultural performance therefore lies in its use by people and institutions in different situations and contexts and that these uses are wide ranging and far reaching informing debates and decisions about broad issues such as identity history tourism government initiatives and

Stories of Achievements 1999-08-27 a fascinating analysis of anonymous publication centuries before the digital age everywhere and nowhere considers the ubiquity of anonymity and mediation in the publication and circulation of eighteenth century british literature before the romantic creation of the author and what this means for literary criticism anonymous authorship was typical of the time yet literary scholars and historians have been generally unable to account for it as anything more than a footnote or curiosity mark vareschi shows the entangled relationship between mediation and anonymity revealing the nonhuman agency of the printed text drawing richly on quantitative analysis and robust archival work vareschi brings together philosophy literary theory and media theory in a trenchant analysis uncovering a history of textual engagement and interpretation that does not hinge on the known authorial subject in discussing anonymous poetry drama and the novel along with anonymously published writers such as daniel defoe frances burney and walter scott he unveils a theory of mediation that renews broader questions about agency and intention vareschi argues that textual intentionality is a property of nonhuman material media rather than human subjects alone allowing the anonymous literature of the eighteenth century to speak to contemporary questions of meaning in the philosophy of language vareschi closes by exploring dubious claims about the death of anonymity and the reexplosion of anonymity with the coming of the digital ultimately everywhere and nowhere reveals the long history of print anonymity so central to the risks and benefits of the digital culture
