this book tackles questions which revolve around the representational purport or lack thereof of evaluative and normative claims claims about what we ought to do what is best what is justified or simply what counts as a good reason for action in other words evaluative or normative claims are familiar but when we pause to ask what these claims mean and what we are doing when we use them puzzles arise are there facts of the matter about what ought to be done much like there are facts of the matter about mathematics or the natural world if so ought claims are probably trying to represent the ought facts alternatively perhaps there are no evaluative facts in which case evaluative claims are either trying to represent facts which do not exist or evaluative claims are not in the representation business to begin with the latter option is intriguing and it is the subject of much recent work in expressivism pragmatism and semantic relativism but if ought claims are not representing anything as factual why do we think such claims are true or false and what are we doing when we disagree with one another about them this book sheds light on this important area the right of one charged with a crime to counsel may not be deemed fundamental and essential to fair trials in some countries but it is in ours from the very beginning our state and national constitutions and laws have laid great emphasis on procedural and substantive safeguards designed to assure fair trials before impartial tribunals in which every defendant stands equal before the law this noble ideal cannot be realized if the poor man charged with a crime has to face his accusers without a lawyer to assist him you can't give me too many cases too many clients too many prosecutors and then tell me i have to conduct a farce of a trial when you know i am not ready a system that will force me to betray my client by failing to represent him adequately at trial is a system i won't play along with you can't make me fail my client
